

Plagiarism in high school and postsecondary

By - Nitya

A dark blue diagonal gradient bar that starts from the bottom left corner and extends towards the top right corner, covering the lower half of the slide.

Consequences of plagiarism in my school

The school is pretty strict about their plagiarism policy, and they believe it is an example of cheating. So we should be avoiding that.

If you are caught with plagiarism there are consequences such as the following -

- redoing the assignment/test
- redoing a section of the assignment/test
- completing an alternative assignment/test
- assigning a zero.

<https://dpcdsb.elearningontario.ca/d2l/le/lessons/25017176/topics/215877403>

College and University plagiarism

McMaster University plagiarism policy - When writing an assignment, you must use your own words and thoughts. When you use another person's exact phrasing, you must distinguish the text or material taken from that source from your own (i.e. through the use of quotation marks or an indentation).

Western University plagiarism policy - Cheating, plagiarizing and unauthorized collaborating can result in: receiving a zero on your assignment or test. failing your course. suspension or expulsion from Western (for repeat offenders)

Plagiarism in the workplace

Plagiarism in the workplace - Plagiarism refers to the act of using someone else's words, ideas, or work without proper attribution or permission. In the working environment, it commonly occurs when an employee presents someone else's work as their own, disregarding intellectual property rights and ethical guidelines.

Article →

Article about plagiarism in the workplace

In my chosen article we see the person has an committed plagiarism faces consequences such as the following -

- Warning of removal
- Pay cut
- Suspension

Overall the article talks about avoiding plagiarism and if you commit plagiarism you will receive and bad status for your new or upcoming job opportunities.